Cyclone

a child in rubber boots wonders in the underground at the dripping grates holds up his hand to catch an emulsion of machine oil and water tells the rush hour crowd how he captured the sky there's endless worrying about the simple fact about a stormy season the weather reports indicate showers at more than half probability and the shoulders in the underground deflate umbrella sellers reach with extended hand offering prayers in silence to those in mourning the pre-written obituary database hasn't been completely finished MJ is dead and from the second stories records dusted off start turning aimed at passersby there's the white space yet to be filled up
