But the Truth

Everyone says that I'm a valuable witness.
To what? Truth, you say?

Truth is no longer naked.
It wears designer clothes
created on some Sunrise Avenue and stitched together in some Jamarta, San Singo, Getucipalga.

Truth is no longer plain.
It's like sophisticated fake jewelry
on a fabulously rich woman.
You either know it's fake but say nothing aware that she can afford the real thing, or don't want to know because no matter what you say she makes others believe it's real.

Truth is no longer justice
for the latter does not imply
an apt symmetry of fortune.
Truth is reality on the ground.

And there on the ground a gander refuses to fly off south because of two magnificent plastic geese
they planted in to make the pond pretty.

Do you detect some bitterness
in all this? You do? You are right.
Do you feel there may be poetic justice
in what I say? Not really? Right again.
