Lullaby

Mak Dizdar

How delicate and fragile you are

How beautiful and pure

Like every child when born

Your hair silken and bedewed

Like the leaves of a young plant's stem in April

Your lips are rose buds still to blossom

Hands the blue intimation of dawn

Legs as though you have none, you poor thing

They are like two lilies for caressing only

So how will you come into the world so tiny

So unguarded

That is why we shall never part, my darling

Never shall we say good-by

Never body of my body

Soul of my soul

Never

I know

You will carry me in your heart

For I gave you my heart and everything around my heart

You will carry me as long as you will

Greet the birth of day

And the appearance of stars

As long as you will be, greet the budding treetops

And grieve the falling leaves

You will live even when your eyes close

You will live in your children

In your children and the children of their children

You will live

Live

It will be known we were moments of being

A grain of sand in the shoal

A spark in the fire

A blade in the grass

Of eternity

How delicate and fragile

You are

And you must live

You must live among people, yet you have no words

You must live among wolves, yet you have no teeth

And how will you discern a man from a wolf

A wolf from a man

Your hands are the blue intimation of dawn

With them you need to grapple

To do battle in skirmishes

With serpent miracles in which the dragon dwells

So let them grow quickly

Let them grow stronger and still more quickly

Your legs are two delicate lilies for caressing

And I will ask you with dew from my most beautiful flower

I will tell you the most beautiful story

Of this and that other world

That you be ready for sweet

Dreams and for sleeplessness

In the heart of tight circles

In the thorns of long

Roads

Your lips are young buds

I will feed you water from the beak of a swallow

That you grow teeth to curse the fiend

That you coo for the good-hearted guest

It is wise to be silent in life

But if you speak a word

May it be as heavy as every truth

May it be said for man

You came here

Where it was most unwelcome to come

Here where it was most insane to arrive

Here where it was most heroic to appear

Because here one does not live only to be alive

Here one lives to die

Here as well one dies

In order to live

Now is the end of the song

Now are my words completed

Sleep

Sweetly

We will never part my darling

Never body of my body

Never soul of my soul Never Because you need To continue your life It is good you continue life on earth
