

Spirit of Bosnia / Duh Bosne

An International, Interdisciplinary, Bilingual, Online Journal
 Međunarodni, interdisciplinarni, dvojezični, online časopis

New Poems

AWARD

In the courtyard of the National Library,
 workers are loading a truck filled to the brim
 with obsolete books, sentenced to death by combustion
 in the city's heating plant in order to free shelf space for new popular items.
 The truck moves and a few lighter copies drop onto the sidewalk. A thin one with a maroon paperback cover lands like a leaf in the wind and fans open before a girl passing by.
 She crouches down and scans a couple of verses. "We'll save you, poor thing," she says, pushing the poetry into her boyfriend's knapsack.

I saw these young homeless lovers again the next evening under the Old Town stone bridge.
 As they were getting ready to retire in their sleeping bag, pressing their bodies
 close to each other, she pulled out the book and he took out his lighter. His thumb was burning while she read aloud, but he kept the flame going until the lighter ran out of gas.
 I don't know of any poetry book that would ever receive a greater honor.

December 2012

Translated by S. Skenderija, S. Krueger, and E.W. Browne
 © 2012 Saša Skenderija, Stephanie Krueger, and E. W. Browne

BOOKS

I was moving often during the war, each time forgetting a bundle of books or leaving behind those I couldn't carry further. Eventually I smuggled my empty hands across the border,

but I believe the books are still alive.

I'll never know whose dust they breathe in the shelves, yet I don't think anyone is ever opening them. As if they were lying, irradiated, in the cabinets of the abandoned homes surrounding Chernobyl. The woods have spread across the land and mutant beasts have taken over... Just deer with fallen antlers poke their heads through the windows and sniff poetry.

January 2012

Translated by S. Krueger and S. Skenderija, September 2012
© 2013 Stephanie Krueger and Saša Skenderija

BOSNIA

1.

For years I have not lived in the country
I was born in. But I visit it, in the same way we as children used to go see our next of kin. Although among your own, you feel like a guest.

2.

Here and there I don't recognize a word.
And many faces. In villages, empty homes and full graves. If you push a door open, the only living things you'll see are a bright ibrik for coffee and white finjans behind it.
As if a hen with her chicks were crossing
a low dining table.

3.

Disappointment gets old and dry with the years.
But it doesn't lose its heaviness.

January 2012

Translated by Omer Hadžiselimović, December 2012
© 2013 Omer Hadžiselimović

The preceding text is copyright of the author and/or translator and is licensed under a Creative Commons Attribution-NonCommercial-NoDerivs 3.0 Unported License.

