A Decree Arrived from Istanbul

Ballad

A decree arrived from Istanbul. An order from Travnik, Right to the city of Sarajevo, Delivered into the hands of Dizdar-aga: To capture the two Morić brothers, The two Morić brothers, the two young men. Ibro Morić and Pašo Morić: To capture them, to bind them, To bind them, and to condemn them to death. And furthermore the sultan was angered by them, Hearing complaints from Travnik, From the vezir in Travnik: that the Morić brothers were outlaws. That they accepted the rule of neither the sultan. Neither the sultan, nor the vezir, Nor of any lord, But only of themselves as lords, And that they acted like lords, and did as they pleased. When Dizdar-aga saw, What the order informed him. He called for his soldiers, To capture the two Morić brothers, To capture them, to bind them, To bind them, to lead them Straight to the city, to the prison, Where Dizdar quickly made plans: Who entered the prison would not emerge alive! The two Morić brothers were captured,

They were captured and bound,

They were bound and led, Just when their mother was making

pita. 1

In one hand was a rolling pin, And in the other a gold jug. News came to their aged mother That the Morić brothers had been captured, And had been led to the prison.

captured,
And had been led to the prison.
When their aged mother heard this,
The poor woman threw everything
Into the courtyard, on the cobblestones:
She broke the rolling pin,
Dented the gold jug,
Then she rushed out of the courtyard,
Barefoot, with uncovered head,

All of Hat-Square burst into tears. 2

She shrieked and pulled out her hair,

Here she reached Sarači St. 3: 3

Shame on you, all of you leatherworkers,
That you gave the two Morić brothers up,
Why did you not save one of them,
Or somehow plead for his life?
Who will console me?
Who will look after an old woman?!

She hissed like a snake, And the leatherworkers burst into tears.

From there she went up Kovači, <sup>4</sup> She twisted her hands, and spoke:

Shame on you, all you ironworkers,
That you gave the two Morić brothers
up,
Why did you not save one of them,
Or somehow plead for his life?
Who will console me?
Who will look after an old woman?
Woe is me, a poor mother!

Then the aged mother rushed again

Straight up the hill above Kovači,
Until she reached Dizdar-aga,
Who was leading both her sons,
Both of her sons, who were bound
With thick chains.
Alone the poor mother approached
them,
Alone she approached them, and fell
before them,
She fell before them, and began to plead.
Eloquently pleaded the aged mother:

Brother-in-God, Dizdar-aga, Release one of my sons to me, Release to me either Ibro, Either Ibro, or Pašo! Ask for something, for whatever you want! Either a feudal village, or slaves? Or do you prefer pure gold? Only give me one of my sons! If you don't release one of them, By my faith, I curse you, And by the fast of Ramadan, I will swear by the sky, and by the earth. I will pray a mighty prayer. There will never be peace For either the sultan or the vezir, While they rule over Bosnia, Nor will things be good for you!

When Dizdar-aga heard this, He said to the aged mother,

> I will release both sons to you, Both sons, and without any payment.

The aged mother was deceived, She was deceived, and returned home.

The fetters and chains rang, The two Morić brothers were led out.

When they reached Jekovac, <sup>5</sup> Ibro Morić spoke:

By God, Dizdar-aga, Stop the guards, Free my white hands, And give me a little tambura, So that I can look out over Sarajevo, So that I can ease my mind!

When Dizdar-aga heard this,
He stopped the guards,
The nearby guards,
Freed his white hands,
Gave him a little tambura.
Just see Ibro Morić!
When he took hold of the little tambura,
He stretched the fine strings,
Then he began to pluck and to sing.
Ibro Morić finely plucked,
He finely plucked, and loudly sang:

O world, you are wide!
Sarajevo, you are beautiful to look at!
Baščaršija, you are wealthy! <sup>6</sup>
Ćemaluša, you are long! <sup>7</sup>
Latinluk, you are flat! <sup>8</sup>
Tališhan, you are wide! <sup>9</sup>
Beautiful Mara, you are beautiful!
Many times you brought me drink,
And sheltered me from my enemies.
My hour has come, and I must die!

Ibro was again bound,
He was bound and they were
led,
Ibro Morić and Pašo Morić,
And they were led into the city,
And imprisoned in the jail.
When it was dusk,
Dizdar-aga said:

Lead out the two Morić brothers, And bring a silken cord!

The two Morić brothers were led out,
A silken cord was brought,
Pašo Morić was strangled.
Ibro Morić watched all of this.
Dizdar-aga spoke:

By God, Ibro Morić, Are you sad for your brother?

Ibro Morić spoke:

Yes, I'm sad for my brother, And even sadder for our aged mother!

The two Morić brothers were strangled,
Their bodies were thrown in front of the gate,
And two cannons were fired.
When their aged mother heard this,
Their aged mother rushed out;
When she reached the gate,
There lay both sons,
Both sons, strangled:
On their legs were fetters,
On their arms were handcuffs,
Around their necks, a silken cord.

When their aged mother saw this -

Her heart burst from grief.
