Lullaby

Mak Dizdar

How delicate and fragile you are
How beautiful and pure
Like every child when born
Your hair silken and bedewed
Like the leaves of a young plant's stem in April
Your lips are rose buds still to blossom
Hands the blue intimation of dawn
Legs as though you have none, you poor thing
They are like two lilies for caressing only
So how will you come into the world so tiny
So unguarded
That is why we shall never part, my darling
Never shall we say good-by
Never body of my body
Soul of my soul

Never

I know

You will carry me in your heart

For I gave you my heart and everything around my heart

You will carry me as long as you will

Greet the birth of day

And the appearance of stars

As long as you will be, greet the budding treetops

And grieve the falling leaves

You will live even when your eyes close

You will live in your children

In your children and the children of their children

You will live

Live

It will be known we were moments of being A grain of sand in the shoal A spark in the fire A blade in the grass Of eternity

How delicate and fragile

You are

Roads

And you must live

You must live among people, yet you have no words

You must live among wolves, yet you have no teeth

And how will you discern a man from a wolf

A wolf from a man

Your hands are the blue intimation of dawn

With them you need to grapple

To do battle in skirmishes

With serpent miracles in which the dragon dwells

So let them grow quickly

Let them grow stronger and still more quickly

Your legs are two delicate lilies for caressing
And I will ask you with dew from my most beautiful flower
I will tell you the most beautiful story
Of this and that other world
That you be ready for sweet
Dreams and for sleeplessness
In the heart of tight circles
In the thorns of long

Your lips are young buds
I will feed you water from the beak of a swallow
That you grow teeth to curse the fiend
That you coo for the good-hearted guest
It is wise to be silent in life
But if you speak a word
May it be as heavy as every truth
May it be said for man

You came here
Where it was most unwelcome to come
Here where it was most insane to arrive
Here where it was most heroic to appear
Because here one does not live only to be alive
Here one lives to die
Here as well one dies
In order to live

Now is the end of the song Now are my words completed Sleep Sweetly

We will never part my darling Never body of my body Never soul of my soul Never Because you need To continue your life It is good you continue life on earth
