Lullaby

Mak Dizdar

How delicate and fragile you are How beautiful and pure Like every child when born Your hair silken and bedewed Like the leaves of a young plant's stem in April Your lips are rose buds still to blossom Hands the blue intimation of dawn Legs as though you have none, you poor thing They are like two lilies for caressing only So how will you come into the world so tiny So unguarded That is why we shall never part, my darling Never shall we say good-by Never body of my body Soul of my soul Never I know You will carry me in your heart For I gave you my heart and everything around my heart You will carry me as long as you will Greet the birth of day And the appearance of stars As long as you will be, greet the budding treetops And grieve the falling leaves You will live even when your eyes close You will live in your children In your children and the children of their children You will live Live It will be known we were moments of being A grain of sand in the shoal A spark in the fire

A blade in the grass

Of eternity

How delicate and fragile You are And you must live You must live among people, yet you have no words You must live among wolves, yet you have no teeth And how will you discern a man from a wolf A wolf from a man Your hands are the blue intimation of dawn With them you need to grapple To do battle in skirmishes With serpent miracles in which the dragon dwells So let them grow quickly Let them grow stronger and still more quickly

Your legs are two delicate lilies for caressing And I will ask you with dew from my most beautiful flower I will tell you the most beautiful story Of this and that other world That you be ready for sweet Dreams and for sleeplessness In the heart of tight circles In the thorns of long Roads

Your lips are young buds I will feed you water from the beak of a swallow That you grow teeth to curse the fiend That you coo for the good-hearted guest It is wise to be silent in life But if you speak a word May it be as heavy as every truth May it be said for man

You came here Where it was most unwelcome to come Here where it was most insane to arrive Here where it was most heroic to appear Because here one does not live only to be alive Here one lives to die Here as well one dies In order to live

Now is the end of the song Now are my words completed Sleep Sweetly

We will never part my darling Never body of my body Never soul of my soul Never Because you need To continue your life It is good you continue life on earth
