Snow has fallen on the fruit-tree blossoms

Author Unknown

Snow has fallen
on the fruit-tree blossoms.
Let each one love
who his heart desires.

If she will not,
let him not impose it.
From imposing
there can be no blessing.

Were I lucky
rather than unlucky,
and might I come
up into your chambers,

I would sit there
on your silken cushions like a pasha
among his faithful stewards

And I'd kiss your
lips of sweetest honey, lips of honey
May no one ever kiss them!
