That Man

Ćamil Sijarić

That man

with the badge on his cap –
so all would know who he is,
sat calmly on a chair.

And just as calmly,
he stabbed a knife into the table –
so all would know who he is.

And for now, nothing: his knife stays there, he sits calmly there –
and for now, nothing: except that in the café, a lamp still burns
on the beam.

Outside, it's a beautiful night.

If the windows were opened, and for now, nothing: except moonlight would pour in - no one speaks.
